Condolences O' world, this is your way. I don't complain. You take all that you give except the pain. We should still strive and seek and never yield Although we are helpless and have no shield Against the ghastly death that ends our lives Before we taste the honey of life's hives. Mr. Farahzad! My dear unseen friend! My condolences how can I extend To your sisters, wife, children and nephews Now that, alas, I myself have the blues? I've heard a lot from Farhad about you And still believe your death news is not true. Ah death! Why did you not leave him to live A bit longer a little joy to sieve After all those past travails and hardships And you could not stand the smile on his lips? Dear survivors, know that I'm rueful too, Among the yews, without my youthful hue. I yearned to meet him in the States some day And did not know I'd see instead this gray And mournful cloud before these darkened eyes Gone blind for endless woes and bitter cries. There's naught I can rejoice in any more, Would that I could reach this barren life's shore! Now that no longer is he among us, But he is resting in God's peace and bless, And your hearts are laden with far more rue Than that of mine, I only can wish you Patience and enduring health, and peace, too, In face of these sad days when we feel blue. Dear Essie! I wonder how to tolerate your permanent absence. Can I really? I did my best for you after we lost Mom and never foresaw this day when you've flown to your ever-lasting soul's abode. Extending my condolences to my dear late uncle's wife, ex-wife, Laura, Mina, Hannah, and Tony (Kayhan), I wish them all patience in this loss. My dear uncle! I won't ever forget your affection for me and my family. I well remember when you taught me multiplication and math in my babyhood, and especially the following lines which once I read in one of your childhood textbooks: Time goes, you say! Oh, no, My dear! Time stays, we go! Ah! with rue my heart is laden for you, my dear nice uncle. Your torch will be aflame in my heart forever. Your nephew, Farhad.##imported-begin##Farhad Koolinia##imported-end##
