I worked with Mike at Wonder Bread-Hostess Cake for some time and on a couple of occasions visited his home. Mike was a very friendly and outgoing person and if you knew him you probably liked him immediately. In most of the conversations I had with him, almost without exception, the topic was what he was doing with his family. It seemed to me that his main concern in life was raising his children, doing things with them and involving himself as much as possible with their lives. A rare thing these days. I was proud to know him.
